

EuroVista: Probation and Community Justice

Guidelines for Contributors

EuroVista

EuroVista (www.euro-vista.org) is published by with CEP, the European Organisation for Probation. Published up to three times a year, EuroVista is dedicated to linking research with policy and practice in probation and community justice throughout Europe. The journal seeks to share experience of good practice and responses to challenges that may have relevance to other countries.

Readership

The journal aims to publish articles that are relevant and accessible to practitioners, managers and policy makers in a wide range of criminal and community justice agencies, especially probation. It is also read by students, researchers and scholars of criminal justice. It is a journal of relevance to both practice and academic communities and contributors are asked to take this into account.

Writing for EuroVista

Articles are welcomed from policy-makers, academics, managers, practitioners and other stakeholders in probation and community justice. Papers may set out new research, but other articles may present or apply research findings published elsewhere in order to enhance probation and community justice policy and practice. This dissemination will add to the impact that research findings will have on policy and on practice. We are also pleased to receive papers that describe and reflect on policy and practice innovations.

The journal also includes a book review section.

Editorial review and evaluation

All submissions are assessed by two assessors before a decision is made about publication. Authors will be informed of assessor comments and asked to take them into account. The final decision to publish is made by the editors.

Readability is a key consideration. We encourage authors to avoid or minimise use of jargon and bureaucratic language, and to explain theoretical issues clearly and simply, using specific practical examples wherever possible.

The typical length of contributions for the Main Articles Section is about 4,000 words, although we are flexible and will happily accept longer or shorter pieces of good quality.

Format

Please indicate the title and word-length of the article when submitting material. Plain unformatted text is preferred, though most processing formats are acceptable. Double-spacing is preferable and references should follow the Harvard convention. Depending on the numbers of articles received, every effort is made to publish contributions within one year of acceptance.

Contact

Articles for submission should be sent to Amanda Williams, EuroVista Administrator, by email: amanda.williams11@btopenworld.com.

Suggestions for books to be reviewed (or offers to write reviews) should be sent to the book review editor, Dr John Deering at University of South Wales, Newport (John.Deering@southwales.ac.uk)

For more detailed guidance, or for pre-draft discussion about a possible article, authors are welcome to contact the Editors, Professor Rob Canton, De Montfort University (rcanton@dmu.ac.uk) or Dr Gerhard Ploeg, Ministry of Justice and the Police Department of Corrections, Oslo (gerhard.ploeg@kriminalomsorg.no).
